Upland students proud of their murals

Works of art decorate and help educate

By Suzanne Sproul

Faces from the pages of American history texts now peer out from the once stark white wall.

Amelia Earhart defiantly looks back at you with an air of danger and intrigue. Martin Luther King Jr. seems to be passionately calling on you to come forth and work for civil rights. And the Statue of Liberty stands majestically proclaiming the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Red, white and blue pieces of our past now cover what once were dirt marks and the sentimental and sometimes offensive scribblings of high schoolers.

Beauty now replaces blight. At Upland High School, replacing blankness with substance in the guise of wall murals has become somewhat of a tradition, according to Boyd Nyberg, school art instructor and project promoter.

The 16-foot by 53-foot mural follows a strong history at the school. Murals depicting elements relating to mathematics, science and now social studies have added a special touch to the school. The latest semester-long project is a tribute to American history.

The Upland High murals aren't the only ones residents can find locally. Murals can be found on public buildings in Pomona, Ontario and Fontana. The city of Los Angeles leased various walls and commissioned artists to do projects for the 1984 Olympics. And murals have an ancient history, going back as far as the Greeks.

Beyond the mere pleasantness of the project, however, can be found the ageold question about beauty being in the eye of the beholder. Are murals public shows of art or glorified graffiti? And if filling bare walls with art is such a good idea, why not eliminate all empty spaces entirely? Is there the possibility of overkill?

Those weren't questions students considered during the project but many had firm opinions after it was completed.

"Murals such as the one the students did have a purpose. The marks tell stories and they're all part of an indentity," Nyberg said.

"This is absolutely wonderful. We are very pleased with how it has turned out," said Jim Hill, social studies teacher and another project supporter. "To me the mural depicts a cross-section of different folks with different traditions trying to blend together as best we can."

Lisa Villanueva, student artist, said she and her fellow classmates took the project to heart and wanted to make something come from it.

"There was lots of planning that went into this. We had a concept. We didn't just plan to go out and paint on a wall," she Jennifer Cook agreed. "This is something that has to do with our culture. It's culturally interesting and it relates to everyone," the student artist said.

The mural was designed to move people. It had a message, according to student artist Jeff Pedersen.

"It gives a human approach to history. It adds definition to what we are trying to understand. It was intended to make people think," Pedersen said. "Just because the work is on a wall doesn't make it graffiti. Murals do, though, have their place. I think murals are appropriate where they will enhance the environment and give color and definition. I think they can become a special bright spot in a dark area."

-Student artist Jeff Pedersen

History and Art director in Ontario, agreed.

"Whether or not murals are considered public art really depends upon the quality of them. Some murals are great, some are trash. They definitely do have their place. It would destroy the effect of a building if murals were allowed everywhere. Graffiti is spur of the moment, but if something is planned with an idea in mind, that's a different thing," she Nyberg said the project not only added beauty to the environment, but also helped to unify the group.

"The project showed how two people can make one job easier and when you have three people together working there's a great strength and unity to get through a task," the teacher said.

Angie Roth and Beatrice "Buddy" Russell are devotees of Girl Scouting.

Girl Scouting's benefits touch two generations

By Suzanne Sproul

This is a tale of two Girl Scouts.

Both are dedicated to the organization and truly believe it helps build character in today's young women.

This also is a tale of dedication.

Beatrice "Buddy" Russell has been involved in Scouting for 70 years and Angie Roth, active for the past 10 years, shows signs of continuing the legacy.

In 1919, 14-year-old Beatrice Price joined a Girl Scout troop in New York City. "The idea appealed to me. I was an only child and came from a divorced family, something that didn't happen so much back then. Scouting became my family," she said.

Her early days were filled with earning badges and hiking on the palisades near the George Washington Bridge. And one Saturday afternoon while the young Price and other Scouts were trying to earn the cooking badge by dressing and cooking a chicken, she met a wondrous young woman who wanted to simply talk about Scouting. The women was Juliet Lowe, founder of the American institution.

In 1927, Price married seminarian Galen Russell. And as she helped her husband at every church he served in, she also started a troop wherever they went

"I was involved throughout college and started troops in settlement houses in New York City. And when I married I still remained involved. I've never been out of Scouting since the day I started and that was 70 years ago," Russell said.

"Girl Scouting is one of the most character-building organizations in the world. It teaches a sense of loyalty to one's country. To me, life is meaningless unless you give to others. Girl Scouting is more than just fun. It's a way of life. It provides an honorable way where you learn the tools to help others," said Russell, who not only spread the Scouting word in this country but also served as chairwoman of the International Friendship committee when she and her husband lived in Tokyo.

When the Russells moved to Pilgrim Place in Claremont, she was approached by the Spanish Trails Girl Scout Council to be a member-atlarge.

"I had a dream of establishing a senior citizens troop and in June of 1976 I did. It meets on Mondays and I'm proud to say that of the eight area Golden Eaglets (once the highest honor any Girl Scout could achieve), five are in my troop. And we even have four men. I admit that took some time for me to get used to having men in Girl Scouting, but there are a lot of men involved today," she said.

Roth, 18 and a Scripps College sophomore, got involved in Scouting when she was in the fourth grade. "Then it was the 'in' thing to do, but I've stayed in it because it's the most fun I've ever had in my life. It's something I want to stay with," said Roth, who recently was honored with receiving the United Way Inc.
of Los Angeles Youth Leadership Award.

Scouting, although it's changed in the past 70 years, still is a vital organization.

"It's so much more than just camping and earning badges. Every year the opportunities for girls and young women get wider. Several years ago I went to an international encampment in New York where there were 75 foreign girls from 25 countries and 75 American girls. We all think everyone in the world is different but we're not. That experience helped make me decide to go into an international career," she said.

Many young women find the way tough in high school when fellow classmates tease about their Scouting involvement.
But Roth said it's basically because some people don't understand how great Scouting is.

Now in college, Roth remains a registered adult with See SCOUTS/Page 6

Program 'HIT's crime at its roots; protects renters

By Kathy Betts

In January, two drive-by shootings rocked a dense apartment area in southwest Montclair that for 2½ years had been targeted for improvements by a volunteer task force.

Gang and drug busts once reigned between Bandera and Canoga streets and Helena and Monte Vista avenues. Police were concerned recently that heavy crime could return to the area dotted by 154 apartment units.

But Montclair's Housing
Improvement Task Force credits increased city Police Department participation for continued housing improvements in the so-called Foundation Area 5.

In a biannual status report released recently, the HIT Force cited increased participation among all city departments, especially from police, as the secret behind its success in improving the quality of life in the area over the past six months.

Police Capt. Guy Eisenbrey, who recently joined the task force, was commended for beginning a trespassing program in Area 5.

In the program, absentee apartment owners can submit a written request to the Police Department for officers to deal with trespassers, loiterers or others creating problems on their property.

"It's good for 30 days and after that time, (the owners) can ask for help for another 30 days," Eisenbrey said, adding that trespassers who refuse to leave private property are guilty of a misdemeanor and can be arrested.

"If they are defacing property or causing a disturbance, we can take immediate action," he said.

No arrests have been made, Eisenbrey said, though some people may have only relocated themselves to nearby public sidewalks or parking lots. "We have not expanded. We are trying it out in that two-block area first," he said.

"We have cut down on graffiti, gambling and drinking by minors," he said.

He said he hoped that in another 40 to 45 days the HIT Force could expand its services to other dense apartment areas north of the San Bernardino (10) Freeway.

"Gang and narcotic activities have picked up (in the northern area) in the last six months, so we have needed to have more police involvement in that area," he said.

Montclair police have begun furnishing property owners in Foundation Area 5 with information on known drug offenders and gang hangouts.

As a result of meetings between police and property owners, a better understanding of law enforcement's limitations and a shift of responsibility back to property owners have occurred, according to the HIT Force's status report.

Improving housing is a neverending job, but the job is made easier when everyone takes part, Montclair officials said.

Projects that got under way late last month in Foundation Area 1, containing 154 apartment units between Bandera and Canoga streets and Helena and Monte Vista avenues, include city- and federally funded security gating, landscaping and perimeter fencing.

In exchange for the improvements, property owners have agreed to form an association with their neighbors and to comply with maintenance and tenant-screening standards.

Montclair officials realize they cannot afford to continue buying out apartment owners who refuse to join their neighbors in bringing about housing improvements.

City Administrator Michael Milhiser said he was "very pleased" with progress in

Veterans hot about court's flag ruling

Angry that the banner they defended now can be burned

By Rebecca Pavitt Raney

When Ray Highsmith went to Vietnam in 1966, he was willing to die for the American flag.

Now he feels his government betrayed him. Week before last, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the right to burn the national symbol.

"I believe that a lot of people have died for the flag, and no one has the right to desecrate it. If someone wants to do something like that, why don't they just leave?" said Highsmith, a 44-year-old Rancho Cucamonga resident.

"I've been believing in the flag all my life. It's worth fighting for and it's worth dying

It's hard to argue with a veteran, and politicians know it. Local scholars say the court decision — a fundamental patriotic issue - gave politicians an opportunity to look good the week before the Fourth of July.

June 27, President Bush proposed that Congress amend the Constitution to nullify the court's decision.

The House of Representatives passed a resolution June 27 that said "desecration of the flag is an act so offensive to individuals in the United States that it may be considered an incitement to violence."

State politicians were issuing press releases decrying flagburning all last week. Pomona City Council members have said "I've been believing in the flag all my life. It's worth fighting for and it's worth dying for. "" they will write to the president and to congressmen to ask them to outlaw the practice.

Two local professors said June 28 that while they recognize much of this talk is rhetoric, the issue also has important implications.

Ralph Rossum, a professor of government and dean of faculty at Claremont McKenna College, said the Supreme Court's decision was an abuse of

He said the act of flagburning signifies free expression — not free speech - and that the First Amendment does not protect free expression.

"Something like this is a real slap in the face," Rossum said. "When you burn a flag, you're not attempting to point out specific grievances to American society. You're not pointing out measures for reform. Burning the flag is the equivalent of an act of violence."

But Pomona College Professor Leo Flynn said banning the burning would set a dangerous precedent in a country that has always been willing to tolerate offensive ideas.

"If offensiveness and the fact that it shocks the public ... become the accepted standard, it can spread the punishment of the offensive," Flynn said.

Several authorities agree that a constitutional amendment would be too extreme. Rossum said passing an amendment which requires a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress and ratification by 33 states would be like "attempting to do surgery with a meat ax."

Rep. George E. Brown Jr., D-

Riverside, said that although most members of Congress don't want to pass a constitutional amendment, congressmen probably will introduce a bill to outlaw flagburning.

Brown said the issue also has given Bush an opportunity to demonstrate leadership. Without the president's public outrage, Brown said, Congress would have been "much less motivated to act."

"I think the president has demonstrated leadership. ... In general, I think the president is moving the country in the right direction."

Rossum is skeptical, however, that Congress will act after flag-burning drops from the headlines. He said he thinks the only way it will be outlawed is through environmental concerns — by showing that burning flags causes air pollution.

In this sense, Rossum said, the flag has become a symbol of more than patriotism.

"It is increasingly characteristic of the way American policy is shaped," he Foundation Area 1 though it took longer than anticipated.

"When we started three years ago, we thought we would have accomplished this a long time ago," Milhiser said.

For three years, the task force - staffed by volunteers from various city departments, a paid engineering consultant and paid attorneys - has negotiated with 42 property owners of nearly 500 apartment units in four designated foundation areas in south Montclair.

Dick Fleener, the city's consultant from L.D. King Engineering, called the last six months "rewarding," because housing improvements are becoming noticeable.

Sobering news, according to the report, is that housing is deteriorating outside the HIT Force's targeted areas in the city's north end.

An additional 19 study areas were identified there, but officials admitted their reluctance to take on any more projects until their current ones were stabilized.

Commenting on the six-month status report. Gary Turner, fire division chief and chairman of the HIT Force, said property owners are beginning to see things as business owners rather than building owners.

Officials 'prepare for the worst' during fire season

By Rebecca Pavitt Raney

The third year of drought could bring a blazing season for brush fires this summer; the number of fires in California this year already has outpaced a five-year average.

Fire officials throughout the state took measures last week to keep these predictions from coming true.

'We're always prepared for the worst," said U.S. Forest Service spokeswoman Marilyn Rangers in both the Angeles and the San Bernardino national forests started making fire patrols. Driving the roads to scan the mountainsides for smoke is a summertime routine.

Angeles officials closed Manker campground at Mount Baldy so forest rangers can supervise Crystal Lake more closely, Hartley said. Also, campfires no longer are allowed in the wilderness areas of either forest. Officials say the restriction is a normal safeguard at this time of year.

The California Department of Forestry hired its usual 2,000 seasonal firefighters to control summer brush fires on the 40 million acres the agency protects. CDF spokeswoman Karen Terrill said that despite the high fire hazard this season, the agency has not asked for more money to fight fires.

Terrill said more fires have started on CDF land this year, but that fewer acres have been

Child nutrition focus of vigil

By Jessica Ellman

Local residents held a recent candlelight vigil in honor of the 40,000 infants who did not reach their first birthday last year because of poor nutrition.

The vigil in Diamond Bar was part of a letter-writing campaign to get more funding for a national food program serving women, infants and children known as WIC.

Results, a non-profit group run locally by Diamond Bar resident Beverly D'Errico, sponsored the event and is helping lobby Congress for more money.

The WIC program, whose letters stand for women, infants and children, provides coupons to low-income pregnant women, infants and children up to 5 years old who are at medical

Each baby saved from medical problems caused by low birth weight would save health care costs of $14,000 to $30,000 per infant, according to D'Errico.

The coupons designate exactly what type, how much and where food - such as milk. eggs, cheese and juice - can be bought as opposed to food stamps which give the user a general dollar amount.

'This way they are getting the nutrients they need," said Susan Ito, a nutritionist at the Pomona WIC office.

"The problem is that a lot of low-income moms who are on drugs have or with low income have (babies with) lower birth weights and that just increases medical costs for the babies and for long-term care," Ito said.

More money is needed as the number of clients increases.

The office, which operates out of the South Hills Presbyterian Church in Pomona, serves about 180 clients a day, and has had to start limiting the number of people given coupons.

Because of funding crunches, Ito said she has had to limit coupons to infants up to 3 months old and pregnant women. Any children older than 3 months must have a specific medical problem before a coupon is allocated.
